

PROUD TO BE CLARK COLLINS CLASSMATE

THE "COLLINSWORTH" TOURING CAR

A few years ago, I, (Danny Schaiowitz) heard that Clark Collins had built his own car. Being a little suspicious, I assumed that it must have been a kit car, one of those you assemble. I sent him a note asking for a picture and comments. He obliged and it turned out not to be a kit car but one he made from scratch. The roadster frame was from a Steadman auto made in England forty years earlier. The engine for the modern-Gothic car was a Ford Mustang 5.0 302 GT with a five speed Mustang transmission and rear-end gearing. That was the start, a frame with an engine. He had in mind what he wanted so he designed and then carried out the task of building a working auto. It took five and a half years pretty much full time. Clark did all the exterior work himself. The electrical wiring of the car he paid for and the installation of a fully working custom air-conditioning unit plus the wheels. As you can see by the picture it's also a convertible. Not bad for his first car he built. Clark named his "Touring Car" the CollinsWorth.

THE "PERFECT PUTTER"

Another ambitious project that Clark started in 2006 was a golf book about the story of the famous Odyssey-Callaway 2-Ball Putter originally patented by Clark. Clark called it "The Perfect Putter". Though it took him years to complete, the book is now within months of going to the publisher. It's a powerful story of invention theft, corruption, fraud, fraud on the Court and about six other legal counts in the case. In this billion dollar case, Clark's attorney's also sold him out and Clark holds nothing back. These are strong statements one would conclude. But Clark has the proof and if he didn't, the book would never have been accepted by his publisher due to libelous reasons. Though there was a settlement in the case, with coercion to settle by his attorneys, Clark could not accept the deal willingly. I will send a note to all when this book comes out. The title of the book is THE GREAT CALLAWAY PUTTER HEIST.

The greatest ongoing scandal in the history of golf involving grand theft, perjury, bribery and dirty tricks!

- Study irrefutable evidence of putter invention grand theft supported by a computational physicist's report concluding it is a six trillion to one probability that two putter inventions could have five measurements virtually the same.
- See PRISON defined on page 1 as "A place where many past and present CALLAWAY executives, board members and managers belong."
- Read how golf pros and industry icons like Ely Callaway, Johnny Miller, Jack Nicklaus, Arnold Palmer, Dave Pelz, Richard Rugge (USGA), Paul Runyan and others fit into the story.

Invention Theft: An American Scandal

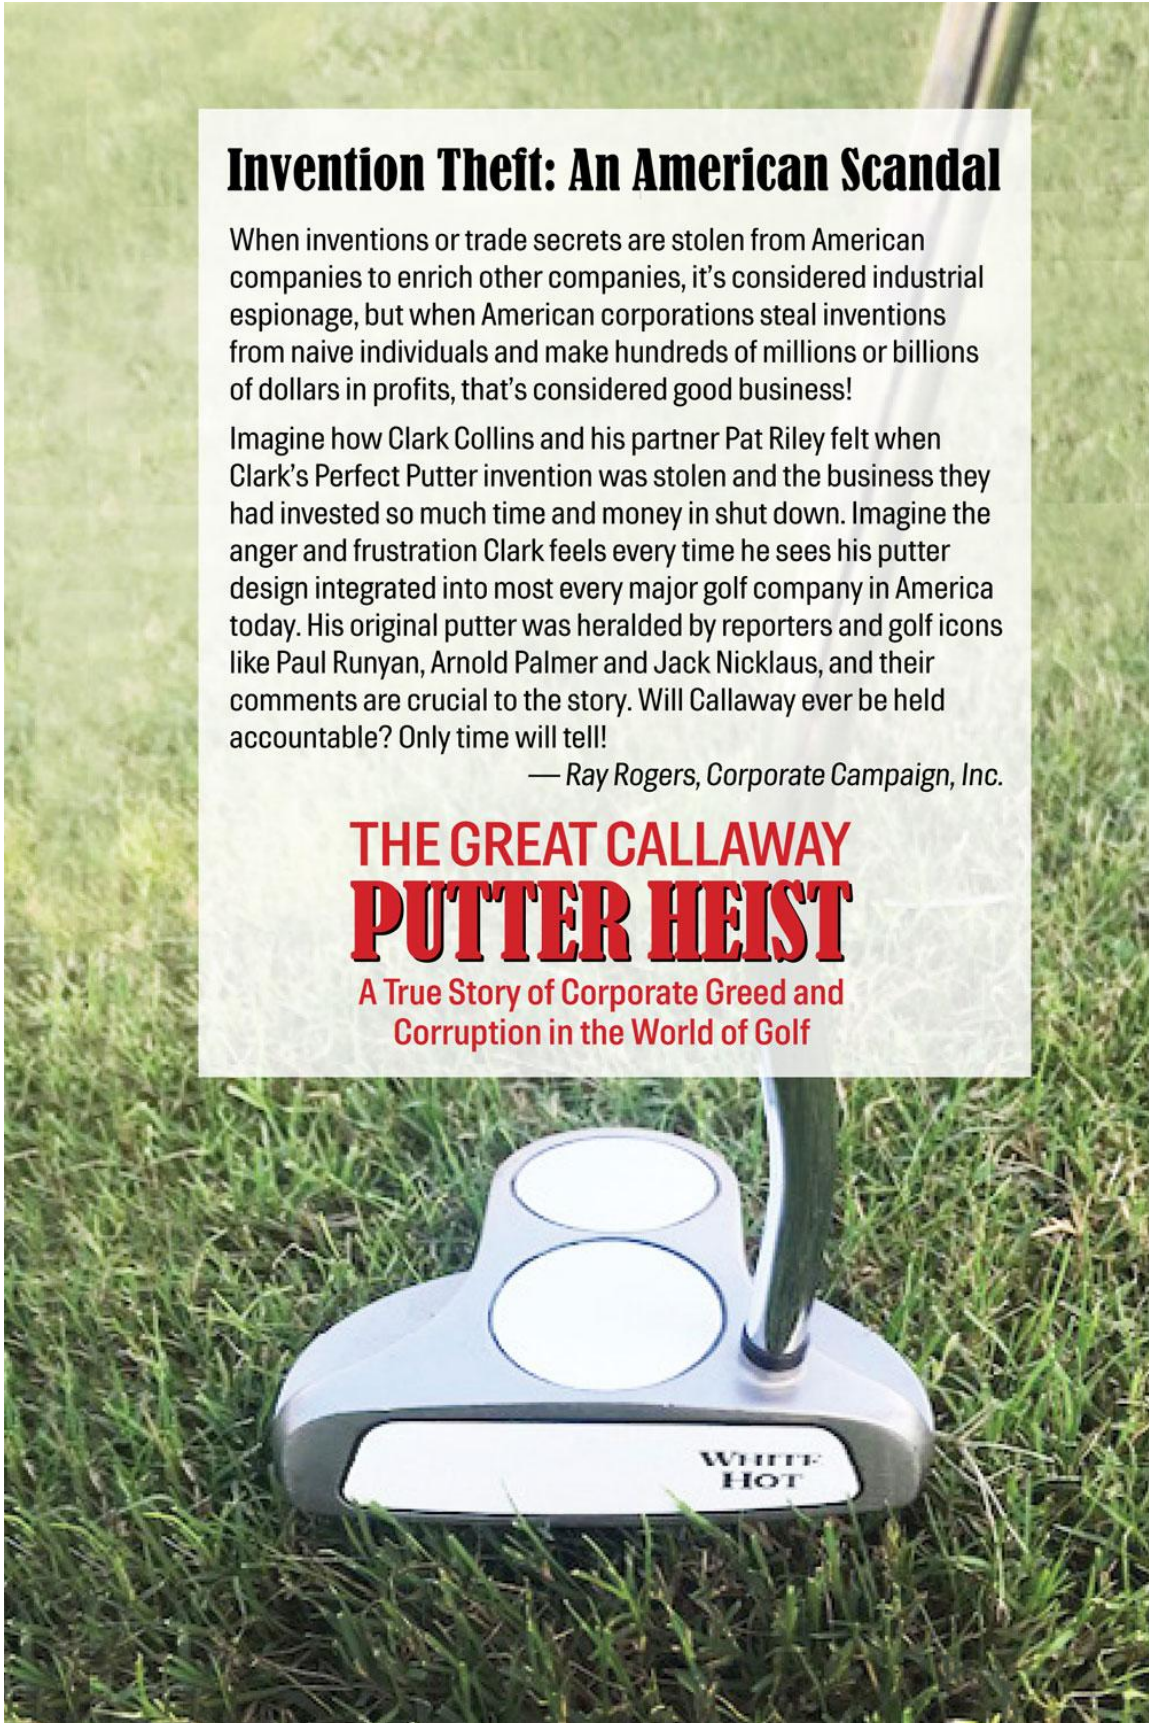

When inventions or trade secrets are stolen from American companies to enrich other companies, it's considered industrial espionage, but when American corporations steal inventions from naive individuals and make hundreds of millions or billions of dollars in profits, that's considered good business!

Imagine how Clark Collins and his partner Pat Riley felt when Clark's Perfect Putter invention was stolen and the business they had invested so much time and money in shut down. Imagine the anger and frustration Clark feels every time he sees his putter design integrated into most every major golf company in America today. His original putter was heralded by reporters and golf icons like Paul Runyan, Arnold Palmer and Jack Nicklaus, and their comments are crucial to the story. Will Callaway ever be held accountable? Only time will tell!

Clark Collins has spent his life being a golfer. He started playing golf at the age of four in 1946 in Lakeland, Florida. After the serving in the Marines, he turned professional in 1964 and became a PGA member in 1968. His Father Charles Collins also a PGA member played the tour in the mid-30's and was John D. Rockefeller's private instructor. He was also the playing professional at West Hampton Beach on Long Island, New York. This photo of Arnold Palmer and Clark Collins was taken at an exhibition at the CC of Darien in Darien, Connecticut where Clark was the head professional. Clark moved on to Florida in the mid-seventies and built several businesses' including a golf learning center.
